PREFACE

Fisheries and aquaculture were identified as the sunrise sector in the early nineties. This stature has now grown to new heights, in that; it is the new growth engine for agriculture in the XII Plan. It is now very clear that information and extension synergies as a factor of growth have a greater role than physical inputs alone.

The first decade of this century has seen a number of new institutions which have seen fisheries development in a fresh perspective. The new institutions as well as the diversified and fresh perspective taken by existing institutions necessitated the revision of the Handbook of Fisheries Institutions.

The first edition of this volume had enjoyed immense popularity among the various stakeholders at all levels in the fisheries sector. Though the first edition was brought out at the request of M.S.Swaminathan Research Foundation, Chennai in connection with the association of CIBA in the joint work done through their Virtual Academy, the usefulness of the same went much beyond the purpose for which it was documented.

Therefore it is indeed praiseworthy that CIBA has decided to revise this volume every 5 years to keep the sector updated. In this volume the addresses of the Krishi Vigyan Kendras and Information and Communication Technology centres in coastal areas have also been included as they serve as the first level information and training centres for grass root entrepreneurs who are expected to play a lead role in coastal aquaculture and fisheries development in this decade.

The scientists who have been involved in bringing out this volume have done a yeomen's job which we hope will serve the end users very well. Nevertheless, it is requested that any doubts or clarifications can be made directly to us and we will be obliged to give the required information.

We would appreciate feedback on the usefulness of the information provided and suggestion on improvement in compilation.
